

Disability Service Providers Want to Guide Electronic Tracking Implementation

A new federal law requires Medicaid service providers to clock in and out to track time and location when they serve clients. The policy is intended to prevent fraud but it's causing privacy concerns in other states.

In December 2016, Congress passed the sweeping "21st Century Cures Act". Tucked into the law is a little-known provision that is intended to protect Medicaid and Medicare against fraud but which healthcare providers for seniors and people with disabilities are worried may hamper their flexibility to provide care in the community while others fear a loss of privacy.

The act requires in-home and community care providers for these vulnerable groups to verify electronically when they start and end a service visit with a consumer-patient, and the system must be in place by the end of this year. The first states to go online have had problems in their implementation, particularly in Ohio, where consumers were given a modified smartphone to carry with them for their providers to sign in and sign out.

The GPS tracking seems to have set off the most alarm bells for consumers in Ohio, and the state's two senators, Democrat Sherrod Brown and Republican Rob Portman, introduced a bill this month to delay the implementation of electronic visit verification until 2020 as these issues are addressed.

—> Click Here to Read the Full Article

The link below will take you to a CCD letter to congress that supports legislation seeking a delay in implementing the Electronic Visit Verification by one year.

"The thirty undersigned members of the Consortium for Citizens (CCD) are writing to express our support for S. 2897 that would delay the implementation of Electronic Visit Verification (EVV) by one year and require the Center for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS) to engage in formal rulemaking with notice and comment."

—> Click Here for CCD letter

WARNING: IF YOUR NO-FAULT POLICY HAS A STEP-DOWN CLAUSE, YOU SHOULD SWITCH INSURANCE COMPANIES

Michigan's No-Fault Act requires drivers to purchase auto insurance. When buying this mandated insurance, most people probably think their policy will not only cover their injuries in an accident, but also any injuries suffered by family members riding with them in the vehicle.

But unfortunately, that is not always the case. Here's why.

Some Michigan no-fault insurers include what is called a "step-down clause" (also known as an "intra-family limitation clause") in their auto insurance policies. A step-down clause is a dangerous creature. Why? Because it only lets relatives of the insured, who are injured while riding with the insured, recover the state-mandated minimum of $20,000 in liability coverage, no matter how much coverage was actually purchased.

—> Click Here to Continue Reading

Michigan Residents Can Replace Their Social Security Card Online

Need to replace your lost or misplaced Social Security card? If you live in Michigan, our online application makes getting a replacement card easier than ever. There's no need to sit in traffic or visit a local office.

As long as you're only requesting a replacement card, and no other changes, you can use our free online service from the comfort of your home or office.

All you need to do is create a my Social Security account at www.socialsecurity.gov/myaccount.

—> Click For Entire Article

Trump Policies Threaten Housing-Health Integration for People With Mental Health Conditions

Stable housing and health care are both essential for good mental health, but housing instability and lack of access to health care are all too common among people with mental health conditions. Unfortunately, the President's Medicaid policies and rental assistance proposals would reduce access to programs that are critical to integrating housing and health assistance in order to improve housing stability and access to health care.

People with serious mental illness make up about 1 in 4 people living in homeless shelters, and over a third received no mental health services in the last year. State and local efforts to integrate housing and health services for people with mental health conditions show great promise to improve these outcomes. Evidence shows that models like supportive housing, which integrates affordable housing with coordinated health and other services, help people with chronic health conditions and histories of homelessness or institutionalization stay stably housed and connected to care in the community.

—> Click Here to Continue Reading

Untaxingly Yours Code Sec. 529A UnABLE to Serve America's Most Deserving

The ABLE Act added new Code Sec. 529A which provides for a tax-advantaged savings program, the "qualified ABLE program," to help in meeting the financial needs of blind and disabled individuals and of families raising children with disabilities.

The most significant downside to accumulating a large balance in a Code Sec. 529A account is that when the qualified beneficiary dies, the State may seek reimbursement from the account for any benefits paid to the disabled person during his/her lifetime.

—> Click Here to Read the Full Article

Why it's harder for this group of people to dress for work

Dressing for success with a disability can be hard work.

Given a lack of appropriate clothing available to those with equipment like colostomy bags, one study participant with multiple sclerosis reported struggling to find adaptive clothing options that made her feel attractive. Others reported having a hard time finding professionally acceptable clothes, and even cited that difficulty as a reason they refrained from applying to certain jobs with strict dress codes.

"People with disabilities are no different than any other consumer looking for clothing," study co-author Kerri McBee Black, an instructor and doctoral candidate in textile and apparel management, said in a statement. She acknowledged that people seek clothing that makes them feel confident, and lamented that the apparel industry doesn't currently meet that demand for those with disabilities.

—> Click Here for the Entire Article

'Extra Help' Program Helps with Medication Costs

There is a low-income subsidy program called Extra Help that can assist seniors on a tight budget with paying for their premiums, deductible and co-payments in their Medicare (Part D) prescription drug plan.

If you're eligible for Extra Help, you may also qualify for help with her other Medicare expenses through your state's Medicare Savings Program.

—> Click Here for More Information

SSA Gives Guidance on the Use of Prepaid Debit Cards by Special Needs Trust Beneficiaries

Trustees of special needs trusts are increasingly relying on "administrator-managed prepaid debit cards," such as True Link cards, when disbursing funds to beneficiaries. These cards offer trust beneficiaries greater independence and the ability to get what they need more quickly. But such cards existed in a regulatory gray area as far as the Social Security Administration (SSA) was concerned. That is no longer the case.

—> Click Here to Continue Reading

Tailoring a Will and Power of Attorney for Multiple States

If you own property -- whether houses, bank accounts, or vehicles -- in more than one state, do you need estate planning documents for each state? The answer is probably no, but you need to do some planning if you want to avoid going through probate in each of the states.

—> Click Here for the Full Article

Medicare Part B premiums devouring many retirees' Social Security increase, survey shows

For many of the 47 million older Americans on Social Security, getting a 2 percent cost-of-living increase in their 2018 benefits has been a bust. More than 40 percent of the over-65 crowd say they have watched the extra amount get completely or mostly eaten up by the cost of Medicare Part B premiums, according to a recent survey by the Senior Citizens League.

"They've had nothing left over to deal with other increased costs," said Mary Johnson, Social Security and Medicare policy analyst for the Senior Citizens League, which surveyed 1,116 retirees across the country earlier this year.

—> Click Here to Access the Full Article

SNT Is Created in Excessive Force Settlement Between Man With Schizophrenia and Police

In an underreported case involving police violence, the state of California has agreed to pay nearly $1 million to a man with schizophrenia. The money will be placed in a special needs trust (SNT) to enhance the man's quality of life while preserving his eligibility for public benefits.

—> Click Here to Read the Full Story

New Rules for Appeals of Private Disability Insurance Claims Go Into Effect

Under new Department of Labor regulations that took effect April 2, workers filing for private disability benefits should have a more transparent and fairer appeals process.

Many employers provide short- and long-term disability insurance for their employees as an important part of their benefits packages. When an employee becomes disabled, disability insurance policies will typically pay the employee a portion of her previous salary for a designated period. These private disability insurance plans are governed by the Employee Income Retirement Security Act of 1974 (ERISA), the same law that governs private pension plans.

If the insurance company denies a claim, ERISA provides for a two-step appeal process. First, employees appeal to internal review boards run by the disability insurance company. Only after the internal review board issues a second denial may employees appeal to federal courts. These court reviews are rare and tend to be highly deferential to the review board's findings. Having the insurance company review its own appeals can create a conflict of interest.

The new regulations are designed to protect employees from this conflict of interest and to provide more transparency in the appeals process. The regulations also require insurance companies to be more transparent about the reasons for denying a claim.

—> Click Here to Read More

For more news and information about Patricia and Patricia E. Kefalas Dudek & Associates please visit us online.

www.pekdadvocacy.com

www.pattidudek.typepad.com/

Disability Service Providers Want to Guide Electronic Tracking Implementation

A new federal law requires Medicaid service providers to clock in and out to track time and location when they serve clients. The policy is intended to prevent fraud but it's causing privacy concerns in other states.

In December 2016, Congress passed the sweeping "21st Century Cures Act". Tucked into the law is a little-known provision that is intended to protect Medicaid and Medicare against fraud but which healthcare providers for seniors and people with disabilities are worried may hamper their flexibility to provide care in the community while others fear a loss of privacy.

The act requires in-home and community care providers for these vulnerable groups to verify electronically when they start and end a service visit with a consumer-patient, and the system must be in place by the end of this year. The first states to go online have had problems in their implementation, particularly in Ohio, where consumers were given a modified smartphone to carry with them for their providers to sign in and sign out.

The GPS tracking seems to have set off the most alarm bells for consumers in Ohio, and the state's two senators, Democrat Sherrod Brown and Republican Rob Portman, introduced a bill this month to delay the implementation of electronic visit verification until 2020 as these issues are addressed.

—> Click Here to Read the Full Article

The link below will take you to a CCD letter to congress that supports legislation seeking a delay in implementing the Electronic Visit Verification by one year.

"The thirty undersigned members of the Consortium for Citizens (CCD) are writing to express our support for S. 2897 that would delay the implementation of Electronic Visit Verification (EVV) by one year and require the Center for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS) to engage in formal rulemaking with notice and comment."

—> Click Here for CCD letter

WARNING: IF YOUR NO-FAULT POLICY HAS A STEP-DOWN CLAUSE, YOU SHOULD SWITCH INSURANCE COMPANIES

Michigan's No-Fault Act requires drivers to purchase auto insurance. When buying this mandated insurance, most people probably think their policy will not only cover their injuries in an accident, but also any injuries suffered by family members riding with them in the vehicle.

But unfortunately, that is not always the case. Here's why.

Some Michigan no-fault insurers include what is called a "step-down clause" (also known as an "intra-family limitation clause") in their auto insurance policies. A step-down clause is a dangerous creature. Why? Because it only lets relatives of the insured, who are injured while riding with the insured, recover the state-mandated minimum of $20,000 in liability coverage, no matter how much coverage was actually purchased.

—> Click Here to Continue Reading

Michigan Residents Can Replace Their Social Security Card Online

Need to replace your lost or misplaced Social Security card? If you live in Michigan, our online application makes getting a replacement card easier than ever. There's no need to sit in traffic or visit a local office.

As long as you're only requesting a replacement card, and no other changes, you can use our free online service from the comfort of your home or office. All you need to do is create a my Social Security account at www.socialsecurity.gov/myaccount.

—> Click For Entire Article

Trump Policies Threaten Housing-Health Integration for People With Mental Health Conditions

Stable housing and health care are both essential for good mental health, but housing instability and lack of access to health care are all too common among people with mental health conditions. Unfortunately, the President's Medicaid policies and rental assistance proposals would reduce access to programs that are critical to integrating housing and health assistance in order to improve housing stability and access to health care.

People with serious mental illness make up about 1 in 4 people living in homeless shelters, and over a third received no mental health services in the last year. State and local efforts to integrate housing and health services for people with mental health conditions show great promise to improve these outcomes. Evidence shows that models like supportive housing, which integrates affordable housing with coordinated health and other services, help people with chronic health conditions and histories of homelessness or institutionalization stay stably housed and connected to care in the community.

—> Click Here to Continue Reading

Untaxingly Yours Code Sec. 529A UnABLE to Serve America's Most Deserving

The ABLE Act added new Code Sec. 529A which provides for a tax-advantaged savings program, the "qualified ABLE program," to help in meeting the financial needs of blind and disabled individuals and of families raising children with disabilities

The most significant downside to accumulating a large balance in a Code Sec. 529A account is that when the qualified beneficiary dies, the State may seek reimbursement from the account for any benefits paid to the disabled person during his/her lifetime.

—> Click Here to Read the Full Article

Why it's harder for this group of people to dress for work

Dressing for success with a disability can be hard work.

Given a lack of appropriate clothing available to those with equipment like colostomy bags, one study participant with multiple sclerosis reported struggling to find adaptive clothing options that made her feel attractive. Others reported having a hard time finding professionally acceptable clothes, and even cited that difficulty as a reason they refrained from applying to certain jobs with strict dress codes.

"People with disabilities are no different than any other consumer looking for clothing," study co-author Kerri McBee Black, an instructor and doctoral candidate in textile and apparel management, said in a statement. She acknowledged that people seek clothing that makes them feel confident, and lamented that the apparel industry doesn't currently meet that demand for those with disabilities.

—> Click Here for the Entire Article

'Extra Help' Program Helps with Medication Costs

There is a low-income subsidy program called Extra Help that can assist seniors on a tight budget with paying for their premiums, deductible and co-payments in their Medicare (Part D) prescription drug plan.

If you're eligible for Extra Help, you may also qualify for help with her other Medicare expenses through your state's Medicare Savings Program.

—> Click Here for More Information

SSA Gives Guidance on the Use of Prepaid Debit Cards by Special Needs Trust Beneficiaries

Trustees of special needs trusts are increasingly relying on "administrator-managed prepaid debit cards," such as True Link cards, when disbursing funds to beneficiaries. These cards offer trust beneficiaries greater independence and the ability to get what they need more quickly. But such cards existed in a regulatory gray area as far as the Social Security Administration (SSA) was concerned. That is no longer the case.

—> Click Here to Continue Reading

Tailoring a Will and Power of Attorney for Multiple States

If you own property -- whether houses, bank accounts, or vehicles -- in more than one state, do you need estate planning documents for each state? The answer is probably no, but you need to do some planning if you want to avoid going through probate in each of the states.

—> Click Here for the Full Article

Medicare Part B premiums devouring many retirees' Social Security increase, survey shows

For many of the 47 million older Americans on Social Security, getting a 2 percent cost-of-living increase in their 2018 benefits has been a bust. More than 40 percent of the over-65 crowd say they have watched the extra amount get completely or mostly eaten up by the cost of Medicare Part B premiums, according to a recent survey by the Senior Citizens League.

"They've had nothing left over to deal with other increased costs," said Mary Johnson, Social Security and Medicare policy analyst for the Senior Citizens League, which surveyed 1,116 retirees across the country earlier this year.

—> Click Here to Access the Full Article

SNT Is Created in Excessive Force Settlement Between Man With Schizophrenia and Police

In an underreported case involving police violence, the state of California has agreed to pay nearly $1 million to a man with schizophrenia. The money will be placed in a special needs trust (SNT) to enhance the man's quality of life while preserving his eligibility for public benefits.

—> Click Here to Read the Full Story

New Rules for Appeals of Private Disability Insurance Claims Go Into Effect

Under new Department of Labor regulations that took effect April 2, workers filing for private disability benefits should have a more transparent and fairer appeals process.

Many employers provide short- and long-term disability insurance for their employees as an important part of their benefits packages. When an employee becomes disabled, disability insurance policies will typically pay the employee a portion of her previous salary for a designated period. These private disability insurance plans are governed by the Employee Income Retirement Security Act of 1974 (ERISA), the same law that governs private pension plans.

If the insurance company denies a claim, ERISA provides for a two-step appeal process. First, employees appeal to internal review boards run by the disability insurance company. Only after the internal review board issues a second denial may employees appeal to federal courts. These court reviews are rare and tend to be highly deferential to the review board's findings. Having the insurance company review its own appeals can create a conflict of interest.

The new regulations are designed to protect employees from this conflict of interest and to provide more transparency in the appeals process. The regulations also require insurance companies to be more transparent about the reasons for denying a claim.

—> Click Here to Read More

For more news and information about Patricia and Patricia E. Kefalas Dudek & Associates please visit us online.

www.pekdadvocacy.com

www.pattidudek.typepad.com/

